The India-Pakistan conflict is one of the longest-standing and most complex rivalries in international relations. Rooted in history, territorial disputes and ideological differences, tensions between the two nuclear armed neighbours have resulted in multiple wars and persistent instability. The changing global order, the rise of new alliances and emerging security challenges further complicate this dynamic.

In any future conflict scenario, global and regional powers will play a decisive role either as mediators, strategic partners or indirect participants. Their influence will shape not only the trajectory of the conflict but also its resolution and long-term implications for global security. International organisations, multilateral dialogues and backchannel diplomacy will play a vital role in preventing crises from escalating beyond control.

We sincerely hope that by the end of this seminar, the attendees will be better equipped with the knowledge of geopolitical implications and strategic perspective necessary to navigate the evolving landscape of modern warfare and empowering future leaders to maintain a strategic advantage.
